Thermite (þə̄·ɹməit). 1900. [ad. G. thermit, f. Gr. θέρμη heat, θερμός hot + -it -ITE[1].] A mixture of finely divided aluminium and oxide of iron or other metal, which produces on combustion a very high temperature (c 3000° C.). Used as a composition for incendiary bombs.

Thermo- (þə̄·ɹmo), bef. a vowel also therm-, repr. Gr. θερμο-, comb. form of θερμός hot, θέρμη heat (in some recent formations used as an abbreviation of THERMO-ELECTRIC).

Thermoba·rograph, an instrument which simultaneously records temperature and atmospheric pressure. Thermobaro·meter, a barometric instrument graduated for giving altitudes by the boiling point of water. Thermo-ba·ttery, short for thermo-electric battery. Thermo-cau·tery, any form of actual cautery; spec. a hollow platinum cautery in which heat is maintained by means of benzine or gasolene vapour. The·rmocurrent, the electric current produced in a thermo-electric battery. Thermo-electro·meter, an instrument for measuring the heating power of an electric current, or for determining the strength of a current by the heat produced. Thermoge·nesis, generation of heat. Thermokinema·tics, the theory of the motion of heat. Thermola·bile a. liable to destruction at moderately high temperatures, as certain toxins and serums; opp. to thermostable. Thermo-magne·tic a., pertaining to or of the nature of thermo-magnetism. Thermo-ma·gnetism, magnetism caused or modified by the action of heat. Thermo-mo·tive a., of, pertaining to, or caused by heat applied to produce motion. Thermo-mu·ltiplier, early name for a THERMOPILE. The·rmophil, -phile a. requiring a high temperature for development, as certain bacteria; sb. a thermophil organism. The·rmophone, an apparatus in which sonorous vibrations of a diaphragm are produced by heat-rays. The·rmoscope, an instrument for indicating changes of temperature; hence Thermosco·pic a. Thermosta·ble a. retaining its character or active quality at moderately high temperatures; opp. to thermolabile. Thermosysta·ltic a., of or pertaining to systaltic motion due to heat. Thermote·lephone, a thermo-electric telephone. Thermote·nsion, tension or strain applied to material at a specified temperature to increase or test its tensile power. Thermotro·pic a. Bot. turning or bending under the influence of heat. Thermo·tropism, Bot. the property possessed by growing plant-organs of turning or bending towards or away from the sun or other source of heat. Thermo-volta·ic a. of or pertaining to the thermal effects of voltaic electricity, or to heat and voltaic electricity.

Thermoche·mistry. 1844. [f. THERMO- + CHEMISTRY.] That branch of chemical science which deals with the quantities of heat evolved or absorbed when substances undergo chemical change or enter into solution. Also sometimes used to include all relations of heat to substances, such as conductivity, specific heat, etc. So Thermoche·mic, -al adjs. of or pertaining to t.; -ly adv. by means of or with reference to t.

Thermochrosy (þə̄·ɹmokrōusi, þəɹmǫ·krŏsi). 1847. [f. THERMO- + Gr. χρῶσις colouring.] The 'coloration' of heat-rays; the property possessed by radiant heat of being composed of waves of different lengths and degrees of refrangibility (thus corresponding to the different colours of light rays). So Thermochro·ic a. of or pertaining to t.

The·rmodyna·mic, a. 1849. [f. THERMO- + DYNAMIC.] Of or relating to thermodynamics; operating or operated by the transformation of heat into motive power. So Thermodyna·mical a., -ly adv.

The·rmodyna·mics, sb. pl. 1854. [f. as prec. + DYNAMICS.] The theory of the relations between heat and mechanical energy, and of the conversion of either into the other.

The·rmo-ele·ctric, a. 1823. [f. THERMO- + ELECTRIC.] 1. Of or pertaining to thermo-electricity; characterized or operated by an electric current produced by difference of temperature. 2. Of or pertaining to heat and electricity; t. alarm or call, a device in which a rise or fall in temperature to a prearranged point closes an electric circuit so as to cause a bell to ring 1877.

1. A current of electricity will continue to flow so long as a difference of temperature is maintained between the junction and the extremities. This current is named a t. current, and the two metals form what is known as a t. pair; a combination of these pairs forms the t. pile or battery. 1876. So Thermo-ele·ctrical a., -ly adv.

The·rmo-ele:ctri·city. 1823. [f. THERMO- + ELECTRICITY.] Electricity generated in a body by difference of temperature in its parts. Also, that branch of electrical science which treats of currents produced by means of heat.

Thermogram (þɔ̄·ɹmŏgræm). 1883. [f. THERMO- + -GRAM.] = next 2.

Thermograph (þɔ̄·ɹmŏgrɑf). 1840. [f. as prec. + -GRAPH.] 1. A figure or tracing produced by the action of heat, esp. of the heat-rays of the spectrum upon a prepared surface. 2. A graphic record of variations of temperature 1843. 3. A self-registering thermometer 1881.

Thermography (þəɹmǫ·grăfi). 1840. [f. as prec. + -GRAPHY.] Any process of writing or drawing effected or developed by the influence of heat.

WILLIAM SHAKESPEARE

William Shakespeare was born in 1564 at Stratford-upon-Avon, where he died and was buried in 1616. His birthplace in Henley Street (top left) is preserved as a museum, which contains among other relics the desk (top right) said to have been used by him when he attended Stratford Grammar School. In 1582 Shakespeare married Anne Hathaway, whose family had been long established at Shottery and farmed the land surrounding the house (above left) now known as Anne Hathaway's Cottage. Local tradition has it that he courted her on the settle (above right). No portrait taken from life is known to exist although the Ely Palace Portrait (right) may have been, and the bust in the choir at Holy Trinity Church (bottom centre) was accepted as a likeness by his contemporaries. In his will, made on March 25, 1616 (a copy of which is seen bottom left), he left her only his 'second best bed and the furniture'. Shortly after his marriage he went to London where he became an actor; it was probably during this period that he began to write for the theatre. He wrote 37 plays and collaborated in the writing of several more. Other works include 154 sonnets, a longer elegiac poem and 2 narrative poems. In 1769 David Garrick inaugurated a 3-day Shakespeare Jubilee at Stratford-upon-Avon, but a theatre for the performance of the plays was not built until 1879. Annual festivals have been given ever since, and today the productions at the new Royal Shakespeare Theatre (bottom right) which was opened in 1932 attract audiences from all parts of the world. -ty, *suffix*¹, denoting quality or condition, repr. ME. -tie, -tee, -te, from OF. -te (mod.F. -té), earlier -tet (-ted):—L. -itatem, nom. -itas. Such L. types as bonitatem, feritatem, were in OF. normally reduced to two syllables (bontet, fertet) by elision of the -i- between the two stresses, so that -tet, later -te, became the regular form of the suffix. From the types lealte, realte, the ending -alte (mod.F. -auté) was in OF. extended to formations from different stems, and many words of this form (ult. written with -alty) established themselves in English, as admiralty, casualty, commonalty, mayoralty, etc. Although occurring in a large number of words the suffix has been very little used as a formative element in English; shrievalty, sheriffalty are among the very small number of words from English stems with this suffix. Such words as faculty, honesty, modesty represent Latin formations in which -tas is directly added to a consonantal stem. The AF. form -teth survives in Sc. bountith, poortith.

-ty, *suffix*², denoting 'ten', forming the second element of the decade numerals from 20 to 90, as twenty, thirty (OE. twentig, þrītig), etc. OE. -tig corresponds to OFris. -tich, OS. -tig, OHG. -zug (G. -zig), and is the same as

U

U (yū), the twenty-first letter of the modern English, and the twentieth of the ancient Roman alphabet, is a differentiated form of the letter V. Latin MSS. written in capitals have V only, modified in uncial, half-uncial, and minuscule MSS. into U. In Anglo-Saxon MSS. U was regularly employed as a minuscule to denote the vowel u, the corresponding capital being either V or U. In ME. after continental usage, the two symbols u and v were employed without distinction in value, but with preferences (1) for v as initial letter and u elsewhere (vnder, vain, but full, euer), and (2) for v where it made for clearness, e.g. next to n or m (tvne, mvse). During the 16th century, continental printers began to distinguish u as the vowel symbol, and v as the consonantal: and by 1630 this distinction was established in English also. V remained the capital symbol for both vowel and consonant rather longer but during the 17th century was replaced in the vowel function first by U, and later by U. From about 1700, the vowel has been denoted by U, u, and the consonant by V, v. Dictionaries and alphabetical lists continued, into the 19th century, to give the items beginning with u and v as a single series, va- being followed by vb- (= ub-), etc.; this practice is still continued in some book-catalogues.

The vowel sounds of u in OE. were two, resembling those now heard (short) in pull and bush, and (long) in rude and brute. In ME. the short sound was still represented by u, but the long by the new symbol ou adopted from French, while u had acquired (in addition to its old short sound in native words) the short and long sounds of French u (ü, ǖ) in words introduced from Latin and French. In mod.Eng. the ŭ of OE. and ME. has become normally (v), written u or o, as in dumb, sun, thus, some, love, but retains its old sound universally in a few words, as bull, bush, put, etc., and locally in a much larger number. The OE. ū (ME. ou) has become the diphthong (au), written ow or ou, as in town, thou; but the ME. ū from French and Latin has become the diphthong (iū, iuᵊ), written u, ue, u..e, as in huge, due, cure, with reduction to (ū, ŭᵊ), after s (= ʃ, ʒ), j, and r, as in sure, jury, brute, and optionally after l, as in lute, lure, and more widely in American usage (A further development of (ūᵊ) to (ōᵊ) before (r), (ɹ) is characteristic of the pronunciation of some speakers.) In combination with other vowels, u is employed in the groups au (ǭ), eu (iū), ou (with varying value as in foul, soul, four, young, route), ue and ui (iū, ū) as in hue, true, nuisance, fruit. Between g and a vowel, and in final -que, u is often silent, as in guard, guide, plague, grotesque: it has the value of (w) after q in other positions and in some words after s and g (queen, persuade, anguish). The pronunciation of the name of the letter has changed from (ū) to (iū) in accordance with the change in the sound which it represents in words of French or Latin origin.

Un, 'un¹, pers. pron., later dial. f. acc. HIN, HINE him.

Un, 'un², dial. f. ONE pron. VI. 1, 2.

Un-, *prefix*¹, expressing negation, repr. OE. un- = OS., OHG., Goth. un-, ON. ū-, ó-, corresp. to OIr. in-, an-, L. in- (IN-²), Gr. ἀν-, ἀ- (see A-, AN-), Skr. an-, a-, Indo-Eur. n̥*, ablaut-variant of ne not. The prefix has been very extensively used in English as in other Germanic langs., and is now (as compared with IN-) the one which can be used with the greatest freedom in new formations.

The form of the prefix indicates that it was orig. unstressed, and normally it is still so. There is a tendency, however, to give stress to it in rare or casual formations, and esp. when the negation or contrast implied is emphasized. The following sections enumerate the usual types of current formations. Since the actual number of compounds of un- is very great and their possible number indefinite, many unimportant and self-explanatory ones are omitted from the series of Main words, and others are entered in their alphabetical places, but, instead of a definition, are furnished with a reference to the section of this article under which the particular type of formation is explained; such words will usu. have appended to them the earliest (or latest, if the word is obsolete) known date of their use, or the name of the first author known to have used them.

1. Un- is freely prefixed to adjectives of all kinds, except where a Latin form in in- (il-, im-, etc.) has established itself by general preference. The two forms may, however, co-exist, and occas. a new formation with un- has been introduced when that with in- has acquired a connotation which it is sought to avoid. The form with un- is then purely negative, while the other may have rather a positive than a negative implication, e. g. unmoral, immoral. There is considerable restriction in the use of un- with short simple adjs. of native origin, the negative of these being naturally supplied by another simple word of an opposite signification; thus such forms as unbroad, undeep, unglad, unfew, ungood, unstrong, unwhole are now rarely found; on the other hand, derivative forms in -able, -al, -ant, -ar, -ary, -ent, -ful, -ic(al), -ish, -ive, -like, -ly, -ous, -y, etc., are too numerous to be recorded. (The unusual types uncome-at-able (1694), unget-at-able (1862) are later in date than the corresponding positive forms.) 2. The prefixing of un- to pa. pples., common in OE. and revived in ME., was subsequently extended until it became the commonest of all uses of the prefix. b. Participial formations (and adjs. in -able) with un- frequently have an attached absol. prep. (usu. hyphened) as in uncalled-for, unheard-of, unlivable-with, unwished-for. Where ambiguity is not anticipated, the prep. may be dropped, as unrepented for unrepented-of. 3. Adj. forms in -ed, derived from sbs., as unbearded, unbodied. The usual sense is 'not provided or furnished with', but occas. 'not effected by', 'not treated with'. Many such compounds may be alternatively analysed as f. un + pa. pple. of the related vb., e. g. uncarpeted, unfeathered. 4. The use of un- with pres. pples. is now frequent, and has given rise to a large number of permanent words, such as unbecoming, unbending, unchanging, unfailing, unseeing, untiring, unwilling. 5. In OE. advb formations in -lice were frequent. Few of them survived in ME., but additions were gradually made, and the use of un- with -ly later became common. In such formations either the suffix -ly is added to an existing word compounded with un-, or un- is prefixed to an already existing adv. in -ly. This distinction is occas. significant: e. g. unprofessionally formed from unprofessional means 'in a manner contrary to professional rules or etiquette'; formed from professionally, it means 'not in a professional manner or capacity'. 6. The OE. use of un- with sbs. survived in ME., and many new formations of this type were then and subseq. introduced; these have been mainly words of abstract meaning, as unchastity, unreality, unsociability. In these the formation may not be ascertainable; e. g. unchastity may be f. un- + chastity, or f. unchaste + -ity. b. The prefixing of un- to nouns used attrib. is rare, and usu. joc.; e. g. uncountry gentleman (Byron). 7. Verbs with prefixed un- have never been very numerous, and are now rare. 8. In OE. there are a few instances of un- with vbl. sbs. in -ung; none of these survive in ME., and new forms in -ing are rare.

Un-, *prefix*², expressing reversal or deprivation, repr. OE. un-, on-, = OS. ant-, OHG. ant-, int-, Goth. and-, orig. identical with AND-.

1. In OE. most of the forms with un- have for their second part a simple vb., as unbindan, undon, and the prefix denotes a reversal of the action of the verb. Additions to this type of formation have been freely made at all subsequent periods. 2. A small number of OE. verbs in un- imply removal or deprivation; the type remains rare in ME., but at a later date it became more frequent and is now common. b. In some vbs. un- implies freeing or releasing from something. This type has also become common in later use. 3. The use of un- to denote the removal or extraction of a person or thing from a place or receptacle, as in unbody, unearth, unhouse, occurs in the 14th c., and becomes prominent at the beginning of the 17th. In some instances the sense passes into that of releasing from confinement, as in uncage, or of revealing to others, as in unbosom. 4. From the 16th century formations in which un- expresses the fact or process of depriving a person or thing of a certain quality or property become frequent. a. When the formation has an adj. base, the adj. may be used in its simple form, with the suffix -en. b. Sbs. are similarly employed without ending. c. From sbs. (rarely from adjs.) there are numerous formations in -(i)fy, and from both sbs. and adjs. in -ize. Other endings, as -ate, are less frequent. 5. The OE. vbs. in un- are almost always trans., and this is still the prevailing use. Intr. uses of some common words are found in ME., and later the usage increases to some extent, but is chiefly confined to words having some currency. 6. Vbl. sbs., ppl. adjs., and agent-nouns from vbs. in un- begin to appear in the 14th c., and later become common. 7. The redundant use of un- is rare, but occurs in OE. unlīesan and ME. unloose, which still survives. Later instances are unbare, unsolve, unstrip.

-ous, suffix, repr. L. -osus (-a, -um), forming adjs., with the sense 'abounding in, full of, characterized by, of the nature of'. In Anglo-Fr. and early ME. the forms were the same as in early OF., e.g. coveitos, -us, envios, -us, but the vowel was soon identified with OE. long ū, and like it written after 1300 ou (coveitous, envious), the spelling ever since retained, though the sound has passed through (-us, -ŭs, -us) to (-əs, əs). Thus -ous became the established type of the suffix, and its addition has become the ordinary mode of anglicizing L. adjs. of many kinds, esp. those in -eus, -ius, -uus, -er, -is, -ax, -ex, -oci-, -endus, -ulus, -vorus, -orus, e.g. aqueous, conscious, arduous, alacrious, hilarious, capacious, ferocious, stupendous, garrulous, omnivorous, sonorous.

b. The compound form -eous is sometimes a corruption of another suffix, e.g. in righteous, courteous, gorgeous; sometimes, e.g. in bounteous, duteous, etc., results from the addition of -ous to another suffix.

c. In Chem., adjs. in -ous indicate acids and other compounds containing a larger proportion of the element indicated by the stem than those expressed by an adj. in -ic; e.g. cuprous oxide, ferrous salts, sulphurous acid, etc.; see -ic 1 b.

d. Nouns of quality from adjs. in -ous are usu. formed in -ousness, as covetousness; those from L. -osus have often also forms in -osity, as curiosity, etc.; but this termination more often accompanies adjs. in -ose[1].

Ousel, var. Ouzel.
